Community Centre as Agency for Making Americans

One-sixth of the inhabitants of our country are foreign-born, and of this great number of foreign-born less than one-fourth have as yet taken out first papers of citizenship.

Roughly, there were at time of latest report nearly 14,000,000 persons living among us, but not of us. They are not citizens nor have they declared their intent to become citizens.

The presence here of so many folk outside the full fellowship of American life is uncomfortable to them and uncomfortable to us. It is necessary to remember, though, that for this condition they are NOT TO BLAME. The blame is OURS.

They are here in response to our invitation—some from high motive, some solely in hope of personal gain, but all because we have asked them to come. Having invited or permitted them to come, it is plainly our duty to make them welcome and to use due diligence in our efforts to make their new abode agreeable.

The old way of exploiting or ignoring them has failed. Our experience in the war has taught that America is NOT SAFE without the unifying force of a common understanding expressed in terms of a single loyalty.

So in entering the period of reconstruction we face the task of bringing the American spirit to all the inhabitants of our country. Once that spirit is apprehended by native-born and foreign-born alike, the processes of accommodation will soon appear. As Secretary Lane has eloquently said:

America is the expression of a spirit, an attitude toward men and material things, an outlook and a faith. Our strange and successful experiment in the art of making a new people is the result of contact, not of caste, of living together, of working together for a living, each one interpreting for himself and for his neighbors his conception of what kind of social being man should be, what his sympathies, standards and ambitions should be.

Each man is approachable in a different way, appealed to by very contradictory things. One man reaches America through a baseball game, another through a church, a saloon, a political meeting, a woman, a labor union, a picture gallery, or something new to eat. The difficulty is in finding the meeting place where there is no fear, no favor, no ulterior motives, and, above all, no soul-insulting patronage of poor by rich, of black by white, of younger by elder, or foreign-born by native-born, of the "new" by the "old."

This difficulty has only partly been met in the United States as yet, but a solution appears to be in progress in connection with the public school, in what is coming to be known as the community centre. The public school, all feel, in common property, and just as the rural school used to be and, in many localities, still is the meeting place of community life, so the inhabitants of American cities are learning that around their urban schoolhouses, often only partly used at night, can be grouped activities for grown-ups in which a more democratic feeling is engendered than seems possible in any privately owned place.

Our first thought with regard to such a use of the school is that it should be educational in the familiar sense, with text books, teachers and pupils.

Hence we have many useful night schools, notably for "foreigners" who work during the day. There can be no denying the importance of acquainting the foreign-born as soon as possible with the common language, whether in night schools, in factory schools, in churches and settlements or in private homes. KNOWLEDGE OF THE COMMON LANGUAGE IS THE KEY TO AMERICANIZATION, since without it interchange of ideas and the impacts of mind upon mind are difficult when not impossible.

But the true community centre is much more than a place of text-book instruction. It is, above all, a place of democratic commingling, an exchange of personal and racial and class values, an institution for the discovery of the common denominator.

It is where men who think that they are better than other men may learn that they are not. It is where mutual acquaintance dissolves, with common satisfaction, that the artificial divisions among men are not half so important as we usually think they are, and that, when we cannot agree, we can, by a little practice of fellowship, learn how to disagree agreeably.

No plan of Americanization, therefore, can expect to get very far which is limited to processes of the mind.

The average man, no matter where born, FEELS a great deal more than he THINKS.

He must be made to FEEL as an American before he can do a safe job of THINKING as an American.

And to be made to feel as an American should, the stranger among us needs to have points of sympathetic contact with Americans who are democratic.

The creation of such points of contact is the great problem of Americanization.

The "foreigner" does not care to be uplifted or coddled. He wants to be met on a common level, as man to man, in frank fair play and to give as well as to receive.

SOFT SNAPS AND MUD ROLLS.

A "soft job" is a well-known term. A "soft job" is like a mud roll; you can advance very rapidly.

And isn't it a fact that many persons are looking for a "snap"—a "soft job"—the easiest way to get something for nothing?

An easy snap has blasted many a man's career. It has not been necessary for him to put forth unusual effort to gain his purpose in life, and so he is usually stagnant.

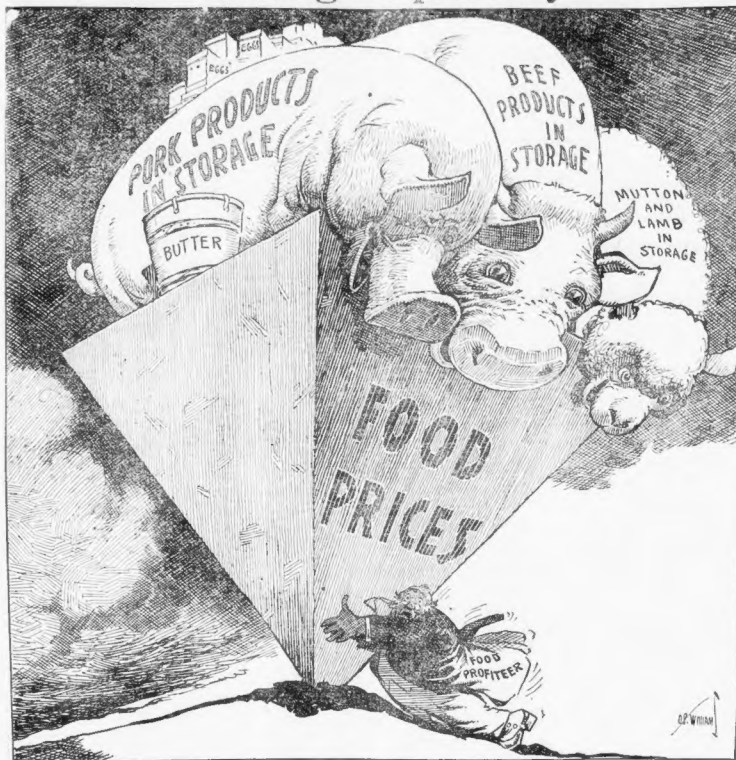

Any man or woman who looks for a job where little is required but to squander time, cannot make a success of life in its broadest sense; and at the time he or she should be in control of big things, commanding a big salary, the party had job will be the only one open.

You may think the man in control of your career earns his money with little effort; perhaps he does, but he has many years of exertion and tireless study if the position he holds is any good.

And he did not advance holding the thought, "MUST I do this and so?"

It is not "how hard" or "how soft" is that job, but "whatever comes my way" that leads straight up to success.

CAUSE AND EFFECT

From Epson, New Hampshire, an item strays down of thirty wild cattle escaped from the town. It's plain what's the matter. Those cattle can read. They saw the signs that the meat-packers placed. That packers are innocent, same as a child. Of all the high prices—of course they ran wild.

FIRE FIEND GETS THE BUTT

Now comes the fire-bug collar button. A Manchester, N. H., man dropped his c.b. It rolled under the bed. Business of searching with lighted match. Result—$75 fire, via the bed clothing.

British "Who's Who" calls him, "General Sir John Joseph Pershing, G. C. B." He already was U. S. A., O. K., and P. D. Q.

BACK TO THE CLASSIC

The public loves a stern chase. The Boston Athletic Association announces that the 1919 Marathon Run on April 19 will be the whole 26-mile distance, as of old, instead of the relay form which was allowed for service men last year.

SKELETON IN THE CLOSET

Brookline has long been boasted as the richest town in the East, if not, in the country. But an investigating committee of the Brookline Friendly Society reported to the town's housing committee, as reported, that "they found frauds in certain sections that would hardly be equalled in the slums of large cities." Imagine slumming in Brookline.

THE MOLASSES LINK

Molasses may be slow in winter. But deputy sheriff in Maine are not. Two deputies at Livermore Falls found signs of a barrel of molasses having been used in the snow. A dark trail led away. It was like "staked sweetest long drawn out," as Milton wrote in "L'Allegro." But our deputies were practical men. They followed the trail to an "abandoned" farm, where they found two ill-fitted sleds and the "molasses sleds."

Patter and Chatter

By William F. Kirk

After the Dance

THE Dance is over and the hour is late—

Say two o'clock or three o'clock, or four.

Together now we sit before the grate

And vole the whole affair a dreary bore.

Except for some dear friend, some intimate

Acquaintance whose bright spirit we adore.

We mingled there with strangers, and, as such,

Felt rather ill at ease and out of touch.

THE conversation, bit by bit, comes back

To haunt us with its futile utility—

"The dreadful crush that Mabel has on Jack,"

"The charming hostess—she has SUCH ability!"

Each sentence but a polished gas attack,

Each moment one more barb in our tranquility!

No shaft of wit—no outcropping of fun—

For that, you know, well, that's not being done!

SWEET are the uses of Society,

For when the weary, dreary evening ends

We leave the park with all its hue and cry

To dream about that smaller group—OUR FRIENDS!

Friendship! Defined as Love that cannot fly!

For all the ills of Life it makes amends!

And Man, who yearns to give his friends their due,

Must mingle with the throng to love the few!

Hymns of High Living

There was a young man named Gray

Whose husband ate eight chops a day.

He said she, looking grim,

"We ought chops for him!"

So she chopped it to eight chops for they!

There was a young lady named Bly

Who doted on slabs of pork pie.

Yes, three times a day

She would pack it away!

Ain't it strange how some people get by?

There is no need of the poet

Who would pack it away!

The slave in love often becomes

The tyrant in marriage.

Wretchedness becomes achievement when done to excess.

There is no need of the poet

Who would pack it away!

The slave in love often becomes

The tyrant in marriage.

WHEN MARS SEEMS TO BE GOING BACKWARD

By Garrett P. Serviss

There is a chart showing the path, during 1907, of the planet Mars among the constellations between March 1 and December 1. Between August 19 and October 1 the track shows a loop where the planet seems to have gone backward. The book says it is a simple thing, and so does it, it is when you understand it. What you please explain it—O. P.

The retrogradation, or apparent backward motion, of a planet in its orbit, at certain times, is due to the composition of the planet's real motion with the real motion of the earth. Mars being farther from the sun than the earth, it travels slower than the earth.

That being so, when the two are on the same side of the sun, and nearly in a line with the sun, the earth outstrips Mars and the line of sight from the earth to Mars moves in a reverse direction over the background of the heavens.

The consequence is that Mars appears to be travelling backward among the constellations, although it is really going, all the time, in the same direction as the earth.

Applying the Test

The best way to make this plain is to draw two concentric circles,

the inner one for the earth's orbit

and the outer one for Mars' orbit,

their common centre being the sun.

Mars, starting with the earth and forming a straight line with the sun, both being on the same side. That is the situation with Mars in "opposition." Now, move them in the same direction around the sun, but giving the earth an angular speed about double that of Mars, and mark their relative positions in their orbits at the end of equal intervals of time. Draw a line from the earth through

Mars, and their relative places in their orbits at the end of equal intervals of time. Draw a line from the earth through Mars, and extended to the circle of the heavens beyond, for each successive pair of positions, and you will see by the changing direction of this line just when Mars appears to move backward and when its true motion corresponds in direction with that of its real motion. You will find that all the planets, whether they are nearer the sun or farther from the sun than the earth, "retrograde," when in that part of their orbits which brings them nearest to the earth.

The effects of the relative motions of the earth and the planets

can be easily observed in the sky

by any intelligent person, without the aid of any instrument whatever, and when once the true nature of the phenomena is perceived the grandeur of the Coperni-can scheme of the relation of the planetary movements to the sun,

as well as of the Newtonian law governing the motions themselves, becomes wonderfully impressive.

The whole vast system, in which the earth is but a speck, seems to fall into order before one's eyes.

Its greater and its lesser members moving majestically together in orbitary revolution, circle within circle like wheel within wheel, each planet pursuing its mathematically determined path with a speed strictly proportioned to its distance from the governing centre of force,

the swifter and nearer overtaking and passing the slower and more distant, as they all swing like glow-worms around the motionless

background of the night of space, where, far off, the fixed stars glimmer in the black depths.

Even Sun Seems to Follow

The sun itself seems slowly to follow the revolution of its planets with an apparent motion which is only a reversed reflection on the real motion of the earth.

As a result of their different speeds, the planets at one time spread themselves at wide intervals round the entire circuit of the sky, and at another time approach one another for a while,

shine side by side in radiant rivalry.
